India's Cash Management Operating Environment

Bank Accounts

Residents can hold local and foreign currency accounts domestically and abroad. A non-resident company can hold foreign currency accounts, but usually must have an office in India to open a local currency account.

Currency Regulations

India's local currency is the India rupee (INR). Its value is determined in the interbank foreign exchange market. Subject to exchange controls, domestic currency is convertible into foreign currency.

Payments

There is a heavy reliance on checks to collect payment from customers. Direct debits are becoming more important although they still represent a relatively small number of payments overall. Cash remains the predominant payment method for retail transactions in India. There is a gradual shift towards electronic payments.

Domestic Clearing Systems

India's National Electronic Funds Transfer (NEFT) RTGS system processes high-value/urgent payments and the National Electronic Clearing Services (NECS) processes low-value/non-urgent payments and direct debits. Paper checks are processed by the Brihanmumbai Bankers' Clearing House (BBCH).

Liquidity Management

Clients need solutions for optimizing liquidity for paper-based collections. In-country physical cash concentration is allowed, however, multi-entity solutions need to consider complex tax implications. Notional pooling is not permitted in India.

Electronic Banking

The use of electronic banking—including internet banking—is becoming popular.
